Common Admission Application Platform: Have you ever thought how the larger universities with multiple courses, colleges and institutes under its umbrella, smoothly process the admission applications of thousands to lakh of students, how the applications screening to shortlisting and finally admissions in your selected colleges is being done. Well, all this is done by a technology which is always high in demand known as “Common Admission Platform” or “Common Application Platform”. The admission process at larger universities — especially those with multiple colleges, departments, or campuses — is typically complex and involves various steps. The software is designed to handle a high volume of applications efficiently while ensuring that the best-fit students are selected for each program.

In larger universities with multiple colleges or campuses, managing the admission process effectively requires robust and sophisticated admission software like ‘TargetX’ from the portfolio of LIBSYS, a leading software product developer in India. The software streamline the collection, evaluation, and management of application as per the filtration embed in the software, in order to achieve greater efficiency and consistency in the admissions process. A Common Admission Platform (CAP) refers to a centralized system or process used by small scale to large scale educational institutions, universities, or organizations to streamline the application and admission procedures, to reduce the human efforts so that human manpower can be utilized in other focused areas for the overall development of students.
